Dairy Drinks, Milk & Cream - Germany - 2023

This report looks at the following areas:

- Market drivers for dairy and dairy drinks, including the impact of inflation and shift in consumer demands
- Usage of milk and milk products, with 89% of Germans consuming dairy milk
- Usage of cream-based products, with opportunities for more varied NPD
- Priorities when purchasing dairy milk and perceived values that impact willingness to spend
- Attitudes towards dairy products, including packaging and nutritional and health expectations towards dairy
- Recent product launch activity, innovation and advertising campaigns

Dairy is a staple for many Germans, but it needs to adapt to stay relevant in the face of growing flexitarian diets. Brands need to prove their value to maintain appeal.

Overview

Milk is a staple in most German households with 87% of Germans consuming dairy milk. Dairy milk faces increasing competition from plant-based options in line with growing consumer concern about sustainability and animal welfare. Indeed, plant-based milk leads in NPD.

Another challenge faced by the dairy market is high inflation. Transport costs, fodder and fertiliser prices skyrocketed in 2022 and consumers were confronted with steep price increases for milk. As 44% of Germans say they are worse off than a year ago (as of September 2022) people with tighter budgets will be looking to trade down when food shopping.

Nonetheless, many dairy users are willing to spend more money on products they perceive as higher value, especially when these support farmers (eg 56% of category users/buyers are willing to spend up to 30 cents more per litre), are sustainably farmed (63%) or prioritise better animal welfare. Brands that align with consumers' values and communicate their ethical credentials will be able to better justify price increases; 48% of Germans find milk products that are transparent about their environmental impact more appealing.

Dairy and plant-based milk blends, as well as novel flavours of creams and flavoured milks are all new ways to inspire consumers to maintain consumption and try new products.
