Fruit Juice, Juice Drinks & Smoothies - Germany 2022

This report looks at the following areas:

- The impact of COVID-19 and rising inflation on the fruit juice, juice drinks and smoothies market
- Types of fruit drinks consumed, frequency of consumption and change in consumption habits since 2019
- Reasons for drinking fruit drinks, including an increased vitamin and daily fruit/vegetable intake
- Buying factors for fruit drinks, including flavour, sugar content and naturalness
- Interest in new juice concepts including ingredient provenance
- Attitudes towards and behaviours related to fruit juice, including environment-related behaviours and ingredient-related attitudes
- NPD in fruit drinks including sugar reduction activity, key claims and new flavours

Value-added, health-boosting options will be crucial if fruit drinks are to win over consumers faced with the greatest cost of living crisis in decades.

Overview

After more than two years of living with COVID-19, many consumers' financial situations have taken a downturn. As disposable income decreases, consumers pay more attention to pricing and, typically, they buy more own-label products. While own-labels are already dominant in the fruit drinks market, 36% of Germans say they would buy more own-label products if they were forced to make savings in their household budgets.

16-24s are an important group for frequent consumption of fruit drinks and as younger adults in Germany seem to be relatively well-off financially – 75% of 25-34 year olds describe their current financial situation as healthy or OK – this is relatively encouraging for sales of fruit drinks.

Flavour, sugar content and naturalness are the key purchase factors for fruit drinks buyers. Price ranks most highly for juice drinks while smoothies are prioritised as a good source of nutrients. 43% of Germans avoid buying products with low Nutri-Scores and this is challenging for fruit drinks as they are intrinsically high in sugar and tend towards D/E ratings.

Sustainability of food & drink ingredients is becoming an ever-more pressing concern for consumers. As many as 33% of 16-24 year olds who buy 100% fruit juice say it's important (ie among their top five factors) that the products they buy are sustainable.
