Sugar & Gum Confectionery - Germany - 2023

This report looks at the following areas:

- Market drivers for sugar and gum confectionery, including the impact of inflation and growing health awareness
- Sugar and gum confectionery usage and changes in consumption since 2021
- Frequency of sugar and gum confectionery consumption, including the usage of gum among younger Germans and the potential for tie-ins with streamers to drive sales
- Motivations for gum usage and potential to offer more than fresh breath such as concentration boosting and appetite suppressing
- Interest in flavours of sweets and how tastes change with age
- Behaviours related to sugar and gum confectionery and the potential to capitalise on social media
- Attitudes towards sugar and gum confectionery and the need to boost the image of sweets for gifting occasions
- Recent product launch activity and innovation

Position sweets as inexpensive mood boosters. Look beyond breath freshening to target gum users. Focus on flavour in BFY offerings.

Overview

The high cost of sugar alongside soaring energy rates, have led to cost increases that can no longer be absorbed by manufacturers, which will result in higher prices, driving retail value sales. Price increases will likely be accepted by many, given the relative affordability of confectionery.

Consumption of sugar and gum confectionery dipped slightly following the pandemic due to consumers taking stock of their health and eliminating non-essential costs as well as Germans returning to work and diminished opportunities to indulge at home.

With 47% of Germans relegating sweets to a low-priority spend when money is tight, sweets must enhance their image as an essential, affordable mood booster.

Gum is used by fewer Germans, but is consumed more frequently than sweets due to its lower sugar content. Gum could be positioned for usage beyond breath freshening such as appetite suppressing, therefore, targeting those looking to manage their weight.

Greater attention to flavour and texture in the category will help sugar and confectionery attract young Germans, particularly the 41% of 16-34 year old Germans who like to try out new foods/flavours. Catering to older consumers must be a top priority and focusing on their specific taste palates by offering less-sweet flavours will be key in attracting this demographic.
