

WOMENSWEAR – GERMANY – 2023

In a tough economy, it is crucial to motivate consumers to spend by highlighting the joy of shopping and focussing on timeless and sustainable clothing ranges.

Silke Lambers, Principal Analyst - Fashion, Germany

Womenswear - Germany - 2023

This report looks at the following areas:

- How the cost-of-living squeeze is impacting the womenswear market
- Changes in shopping priorities when buying womenswear in the last year
- Who is buying womenswear and what types of clothes are being purchased
- How and where people have bought womenswear in the last 12 months
- Understanding and establishing purchase drivers for womenswear
- Analysing attitudes and behaviours towards the purchasing of womenswear
- Innovations in womenswear purchasing including the use of technology, sustainable ranges and brand image

In a tough economy, it is crucial to motivate consumers to spend by highlighting the joy of shopping and focussing on timeless and sustainable clothing ranges.

Overview

There has been a significant shift in the world of women's fashion shopping, as 80% of female shoppers prioritise buying longer-lasting clothing. Instead of following short-term fashion trends, they seek higher-quality items. Almost half of womenswear shoppers believe seasonality in fashion has diminished, reflecting a growing focus on sustainability and longevity.

In the year to March 2023, 65% of women reduced their fashion purchases due to the cost-of-living crisis, making budget control a priority. This pressure on women's budgets is particularly evident, as more women than men have curbed impulse purchases.

Women have faced tougher financial situations than men, leading them to reduce how much clothes they buy. Additionally, as women age, their fashion spending declines, particularly among seniors, due to limited collections catering to older demographics, which impacts their purchase behaviour.

Fashion continues to be a significant form of self-expression, particularly for female Gen Z shoppers (73%) and will drive the market forward. Sustainability's growing importance leads to a trend of mixing new fashion with vintage pieces or visibly repaired garments, with 34% of Gen Z women planning to repair clothes in the future. While currently seen in niches, this trend is expected to move to the mainstream.
